

BUILDING RAPPORT

A brief history of the Community and Youth Workers' Union

This book should have broad appeal. It fills a big gap in labour and trade union history and reflects the development of three education based occupational groups. It is a history of little known areas of social and welfare policies.

BUILDING RAPPORT provides a fascinating and highly readable general history of a specialist trade union that has regularly punched above its weight. It is also a unique reflection on how a trade union has been central to the formation of a public service, in this case youth work and the Youth Service, and how it has helped develop community work and playwork.
